

ECE/AP Latin Summer Assignment 2014-15

Course Overview: The history of Rome establishes a template for leadership in the military and political world of future generations. “I sing of arms and the man . . .” these short words, express a central theme of the first century BCE and of the two works of literature on this syllabus: The Aeneid of Vergil and Caesar’s De Bello Gallico. The course will focus on not only the development of the ability to write a literal English translation of a Latin passage, but also to identify and analyze features of the authors’ expression, including word choice and placement, imagery, figures of speech, sound and metrical effects. Students will also discuss particular motifs relevant to the works and analyze characters and situations as portrayed in specific passages. Students will be given weekly practice in reading at sight and daily practice in translating literally as well as oral reading in dactylic hexameter verse and literary interpretation.

Over the summer before the course begins, students will complete the following two requirements. Students will be assessed on these requirements when they return to school:

- Read Augustus, by Anthony Everitt OR Augustus, by John Williams OR Cleopatra, by Stacey Schiff
- Write a two-page reaction paper to your book. Write about some aspect of Octavian’s or Cleopatra’s personage that revealed some of his/her ambition. At least three citations from the book are necessary.
- High-frequency Vergil vocabulary activity, see below. There will be a test the first week of school on these words.
